Music

It's sort of funny how people tend to bash on this generations music constantly. There's this saying that the kind of music a person listens to reflects who they are. I personally don't really mix with this generations music too well. I prefer things that reflect my mood or help change it. For example, if I'm down I'd listen to Riptide by Vance Joy. Something about the ukulele and how upbeat it is makes me smile. If I'm pretty calm I'd listen to some of my favorite artists like Lana Del Rey or The Neighbourhood. If I'm really busy I like listening lo-fi music to help me feel organized or fast pace music to make me hurry up. Whenever I'm alone in public, I tend to blast fast paced music or rock to get me into the whole hurrying up kind of mood. Yet back to the point, a person may like this generations music because that's how they were brought up. For example, I know a lot of people from the Bronx like A Boogie Wit Da Hoodie (a rapper) because he mentions how harsh it was here. Maybe they like other rap artists because they feel like they're savages and the only point of life is to acquire money and females. Everyone's music taste is different and unique in its own way.
