Jane

To begin with Jane, outcasted from the rest of the world was taken to live alone with only her husband and nurse, keeping her only the slightness of company hoping that this could cure her insanity by getting away from the rest of society. Although this is the form of meditation her husband being her doctor has chosen to Prescribe to her. Isolation. For instance the story states “still I will proudly declare that there is something queer about it Else, why should it be so cheaply and why have stood so long untenanted john laughs at me of course” thus the importance of such complex that john condemned her to stay in proves the statement of society being responsible for one's madness is because the text said “untenanted” meaning not cared for and neglected, exposing that society does not look upon Jane as being normal because john took her to a neglected place where no one would dare to bother her because it's not in the norms to do so making it important that she recovers from this insanity as well she sees the house as”queer” strange and odd ironically how she’s labeled as because of her insanity. Don't forget” john laughs at me of course” which leads to the next reason.
