

Please Click Here to Review this Short Story

Sabrina

Sabrina looked up from her book, watching the world go by without her. She walked by people and no one seemed to notice her. It was as if she was invisible, completely concealed from sight. Sabrina didn't think much of it until she went home and her parents didn't even look at her. She went to hug her dad but then the unexplainable happened. All her dad said was, "honey, do you feel that cool breeze?"

"Oh Harold, don't start with that again."

"Start what?"

"The whole Sabrina's presence being here, she's been dead for 6 years. It's over, she's gone."

It was then that Sabrina realized why she was so invisible. She was trapped in a world she no longer belonged in. She screamed as she felt the cold emptiness take over until all she should do was cry. She decided to sit next her parents and hold onto them but all she felt was a frigid sheet of ice. Sabrina was separated from everything and everyone. Her biggest fear had come true and it was the fear of being alone and trapped inside of her own mind unable to break free.

Please Click Here to Review this Short Story